

I am submitting this narrative cv highlighting relevant information for Leverett's purposes.

Currently, I am a resident tutor at Leverett House, co-chair of the Leverett Fellowship Committee, Public Service Committee, and a member of the Pre-Law Committee.

Prior to my current role at Leverett House, I was the Allston Burr Senior Tutor (the resident dean's position and responsibilities before its renaming).

In addition to my work on behalf of Leverett House, at Harvard University, I serve as the Director of Fellowships for the Harvard Law School, the Harvard Law School Public Service Venture Fund Sponsored Fellowships, and the Associate Director of the Bernard Koteen Office of Public Interest Advising. Prior to that, I was the Director of the Wasserstein Fellows Program, managing a multi-million-dollar foundation, and the Director of the Ford Foundation Public Interest Law Fellowship Program.

At the Harvard Law School, I have won the top two awards offered at the school: the Dean's Award for Excellence and the Suzanne Richardson Award.

Concurrently with these roles, I have taught at Harvard University Arts & Sciences and the Extension School for more than 25 years. Among my teaching responsibilities, I have taught in the Government Department, the English Department, the History & Literature Concentration, the Expository Writing Program, and the General Education Program. In almost every semester, I have won teaching awards, including the highest granted award in the teaching of writing (the Conway Award), the Bok Center Awards, and the Levenson prize. In addition, I won a Harvard Innovation Awards for new courses I designed in ethics, civil rights, and women's studies. I have also won numerous national awards for academics, public service, and journalism. Finally, I have created and run a series of webinars for the university on several academic topics that teach local and global students and professionals.

I have been educated and awarded honors, as well as merit-based fellowships, at Harvard, Princeton, Columbia, Cornell, Brandeis, Cambridge, and the Sorbonne universities. I am also a Harvard Certified Mediator and Negotiator, and I am a certified grant writer. I have published numerous articles, books, and guides and presented in national and international for a as well as for the media (all major national networks, ABC, NBC, CBS, the International Herald Tribune, Radio Free Europe, The New York Times, etc.).

Before returning to Harvard to teach, I worked for The New Yorker, Amnesty International-Paris, France, and the American Civil Liberties Union.
